Walk With Me: Photographs and Reflections from Exploring Central Virginia

Exhibit By Rev. Florence Brooks

Florence Brooks brings a contemplative eye and pastoral heart to her photography. She captures moments of natural beauty in local parks using her cell phone camera. As a spiritual care provider and senior living professional, her work reflects a deep appreciation for life's quiet moments and accessible wonders.

This exhibit grew from a personal practice of mindful observation, originally shared through social media as an invitation for others to pause and notice the extraordinary in the ordinary. Inspired by Barbara Cooney's beloved words, "You must do something to make the world more beautiful," she offers these images and reflections as her contribution to that heartfelt purpose.

A mother and wife whose various roles nurture both family and community, Florence demonstrates how art can emerge from the intersection of daily life and intentional presence, reminding us that beauty is not distant or reserved for the professional artist, but present and available to all who take time to look.
